https://www.dell.com/support/article/us/en/19/SLN215594 I don't think it exists now, but if I looked now it would tell me you need a Dell support article number. A search engine will help with this as well as a Google Search with the words "driver jinka 1351 download". It may take some time to find the driver you want because there are many out there that have the same name. If you have more information about your system or hardware, that will be helpful in locating a driver for your device. Most anti virus and firewall programs have a function to check the integrity of a file before installing it. They also have a function to check the file after it has been installed. If something happens, such as a driver installation or other file deletion process, that makes a difference from what the anti virus and firewall program expected, the system will often malfunction. In order for drivers to work correctly on Windows Vista/7/8 you must be using an up-to-date version of the OS. In this case, Windows 7/8/10 users can download and install updates from their OS's support pages, Internet Explorer should automatically notify you when there are updates available to install. If you are using an older version of Windows, such as XP or Vista, you will not be offered any updates to the OS. You may still be able to update drivers for supported devices by visiting computer manufacturers' websites or searching online for drivers that will support your hardware.
